The Neighbourhood Story:-

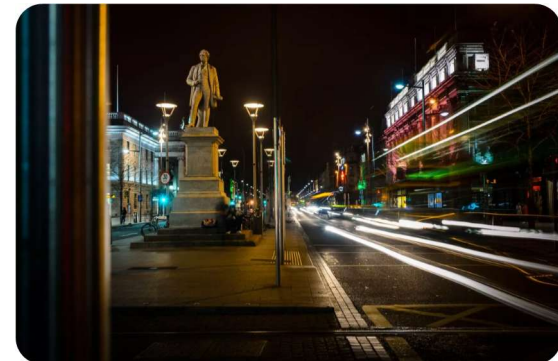

O'Connell Street, once a narrow residential road, has transformed into the main thoroughfare of Dublin. Rich in history and culture, this grand boulevard stands as a focal point for the nation, hosting parades, commemorations, celebration marches, and protests that echo the spirit of the people. A site of political uprisings, particularly the Easter Rising of 1916, O'Connell Street represents a pivotal moment in Ireland's national history, symbolizing the transition from past to present.

Amidst its history of conflict, the city shines with a vibrant culture of arts and literature, celebrated through the works of legends like James Joyce and Oscar Wilde. As a UNESCO City of Literature, Dublin thrives with literary sites, including Georgian squares, heritage treasures, and the Museum of Literature Ireland. The Library of Trinity College Dublin, informally known as the Old Library, is the main library that serves Trinity College, and is the largest library in Ireland.

Feel the narrative beneath your feet on the banks of the River Liffey in Dublin's Docklands, the Jeanie Johnston is a full-sized replica of a famous ship which carried Irish emigrants to North America. Boarding the Jeanie Johnston is a step towards understanding the millions of people that headed to North America for survival. Visitors are reminded about the poverty-stricken Irish immigrants 150 years ago as they boarded the sturdy ship for the difficult transatlantic voyage and uncertain future in the New World.

On the site of the hotel itself once stood Findlater's House. In 1823, Alexander Findlater established The Irish & Scotch Whiskey Stores, a pioneering business specializing in the import and export of luxury goods, including a varied selection of foods, teas, wines, spirits, and beers. Despite the modern appearance, Findlater House is rich in history and holds significant importance for O'Connell Street.

From its rich history to its dynamic present, O'Connell Street remains a symbol of unity and cultural pride, inviting everyone to explore, reflect, and celebrate the heart of Dublin.

Old Library

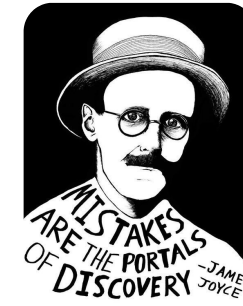

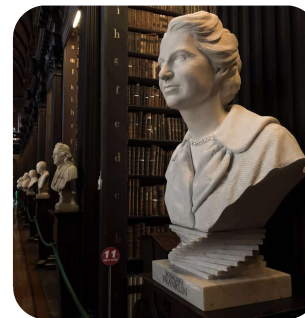

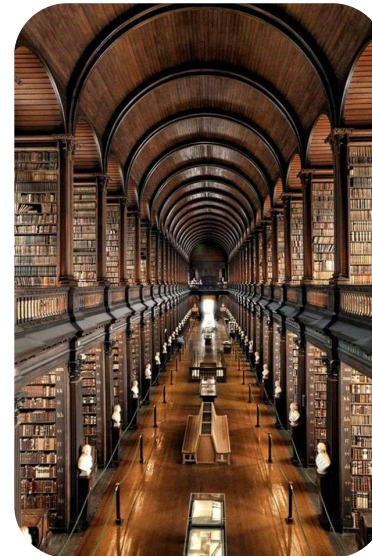

The main chamber of the Old Library is the Long Room; a magical space at nearly 65 metres in length, it is filled with 200,000 of the Library's oldest books and is one of the most impressive libraries in the world. When built (between 1712 and 1732) it had a flat plaster ceiling and shelving for books was on the lower level only, with an open gallery. By the 1850s these shelves had become completely full; largely as since 1801 the Library had been given the right to claim a free copy of every book published in Britain and Ireland. In 1860 the roof was raised to allow construction of the present barrel-vaulted ceiling and upper gallery bookcases.

Marble busts line the Long Room, a collection that began in 1743 when 14 busts were commissioned from sculptor Peter Scheemakers. The busts are of the great philosophers and writers of the western world and also of those connected with Trinity College Dublin.

Another treasure in the Long Room is one of the few remaining copies of the 1916 Proclamation of the Irish Republic which was read outside the General Post Office on 24 April 1916 by Patrick Pearse at the start of the Easter Rising.

There is also a medieval harp on display known as the Brian Boru harp, it is the oldest of its kind in Ireland. The harp likely dates to the 15th century and is a national symbol of Ireland, appearing on coins, the coat of arms, and the Guinness logo.

There are temporary exhibitions held in the Long Room which display the rich holdings of the Library and encourage further research and learning.

Books and doors
are the same thing.
You open them,
and you go through
into another world.

The Jeanie Johnston

On the banks of the River Liffey in Dublin's Docklands, the Jeanie Johnston is a full-sized replica of a famous ship which carried Irish emigrants to North America during the Famine (1845-1852). Over 1 million people emigrated at that time, packed onto overcrowded, disease-ridden ships on which many died en route. But no lives were ever lost on the Jeanie Johnston, likely thanks to the ship's owner, who refused to overload the ship and who provided a doctor for the voyage.

Jeanie Johnston Tall Ship and Famine Museum in Dublin tells a story of a proud Irish emigrant ship in the city centre of Dublin. Boarding the Jeanie Johnston is a step towards understanding the millions of people that headed to North America for survival and through hope & determination started a new life in the face of adversity.

A new National Famine Way has been launched, following the footsteps of 1,490 emigrants who walked from Strokestown, Co Roscommon, to Dublin at the height of the famine in 1847.

Trace the stories of Irish emigrants who became scientists, politicians, poets, artists and even outlaws all over the world at EPIC the Irish Emigration Museum.

Findlater's House

In 1823, Alexander Findlater established The Irish & Scotch Whiskey Stores, a pioneering business specializing in the import and export of luxury goods, including a varied selection of foods, teas, wines, spirits, and beers. By the end of the century, Findlater's enterprise had flourished, expanding with locations throughout Dublin's residential neighborhoods, centering around a prominent headquarters at 29-32 O'Connell Street.

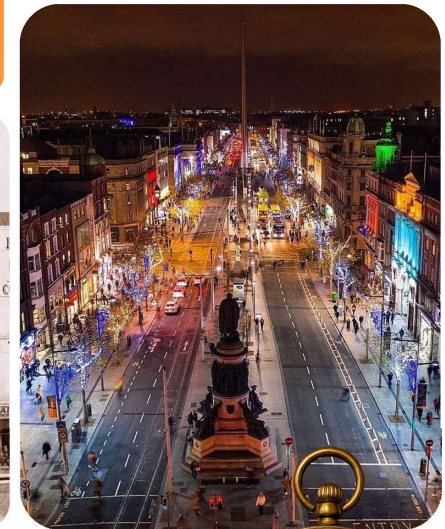

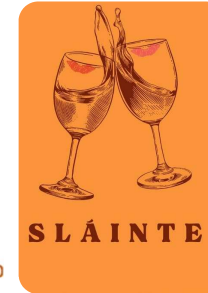

In 1968, the premises were sold to the Lyons Group, leading to the demolition of the historic buildings in 1972 to make way for a modern six-story office block. By 2013, plans were approved to transform the building into a hotel, which involved demolishing the existing top floor and adding two new floors, along with modernizing the exterior.

Despite this modern appearance, Findlater House is rich in history and holds significant importance for O'Connell Street. From its 18th-century origins to its 21st-century transformations, Findlater's has been a cornerstone of Dublin's commercial and cultural life. The book Findlaters: The Story of a Dublin Merchant Family, documents a rich tapestry of stories about Dublin, the Findlater businesses and all interwoven to give an interesting view of the city and the history of Ireland from a perspective not often seen.

This pioneering spirit weaves its way through time and to the four corners of the globe along with the history of the people who have driven it on.
